

Qian Depei, is a professor at both Xi'an Jiaotong University and Beihang University, and is director of the Sino-German Joint Software Institute.

Since 1996 he has been involved in the activities of the expert group for the National High-tech Research & Development Program (the 863 program). He was the chief scientist for the 863 key project on high performance computer and core software. Currently, he is the chief scientist of the 863 key project on high productivity computer and Grid service environment.

He has been working on computer architecture and computer networks for many years. His current research interests include high performance computer architecture and implementation technology, grid computing, network management and network performance measurement. He has published more than 100 papers in journals and conferences.